HOW TO FOCUS IN AN UNFOCUSED WORLD

THE FOCUS PROJECT

Question + Answer

HOW TO FOCUS IN AN UNFOCUSED WORLD

THE FOCUS PROJECT

Thank You

CAUTIOUS

When Hedgehogs sense a threat, they curl-up into a protective ball with their 5,000 to 10,000 spiny quills protruding for protection. Similarly, we curl up to protect ourselves from failure. Hedgehogs often use procrastination as protection. We tell ourselves that we will come out of our protective ball once all dangers and hurdles are gone.

FOMO

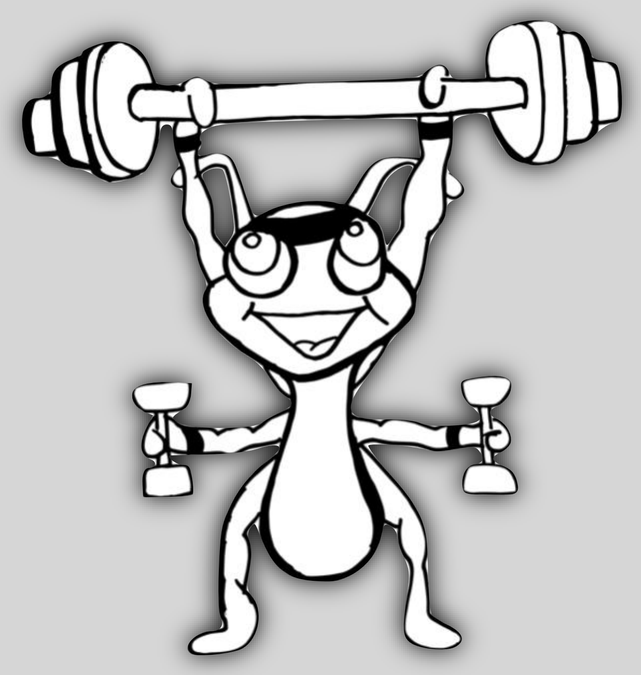

Squirrels struggle to stay on task. The next bright and shining object is too good to pass up. Squirrels are great at trend spotting and are aware of the hippest restaurant in town. Squirrels except starting and attacking projects, but before we can complete them we move onto the next latest and greatest thing.

PEOPLE PLEASER

A Chameleon changes colors to match its surroundings so that he or she is more difficult for predators to see. This can be a particularly helpful skill to have. However, by doing what we feel we should be doing or what others feel we should be doing, we are avoiding stepping into our own unique story and destiny.

OVERLOAD

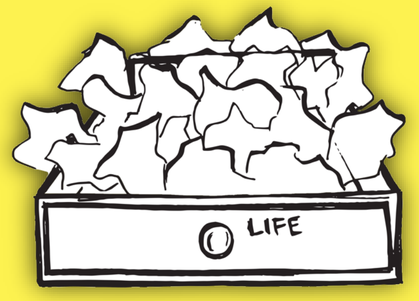

Army Ants tend to overload themselves. We lift 5,000 times our weight, but that doesn't mean we should. We can handle the load, but when we get back to the anthill we have a problem. All this stuff doesn't fit down the opening of the anthill! We would have been better off focusing on one thing at a time.
